30 Campaign for Nebraska Update
Nancy A. Keegan, Chair, and Clarence L. Castner, President
This year, the foundation has many reasons to celebrate. The first is that we turned 75 years old. Seventy-five years ago, University Chancellor Edgar Burnett called on a few business and civic leaders and asked if they would help him create a university greater than what the state alone could afford. We are grateful those first volunteers said yes, and more grateful still that donors over the years have continued to support that timeless mission by making private gifts. In this year’s annual report, “The University of Nebraska Foundation at 75: A Portrait,” we highlight just a few of those people who have helped bring us to this 75th year.

And what a year it was. First, a new all-time record was set for gifts given to the university, at $172.1 million. Second, the amount transferred to the university was also an all-time record, at $130.2 million. As many of you are aware, the amount transferred differs from the amount raised due to the fact that many donors choose to have their gifts endowed, and only the interest is transferred to the university. Finally, our total assets hit a record on June 30, 2011, with a market value of $1.7 billion; $1.2 billion of that is our endowment. The largest part of the endowment, referred to as Fund A, had a return of 22.6%.

The foundation continues to see success in its fundraising campaign, the “Campaign for Nebraska: Unlimited Possibilities,” now having raised more than $1 billion toward the $1.2 billion goal. We have three years to go before the campaign concludes in 2014; a snapshot of the campaign’s progress is provided at the end of this year’s annual report.

As always, our full, independent auditor’s report is available online at nufoundation.org/annualreports.

Thank you for your help, support, gifts, oversight and volunteer leadership over the years. It is no doubt the reason for 75 years of success.

Clarence L. Castner
Carol Cope

She learned about philanthropy from her parents. They gave where they could even though they weren’t wealthy.

Carol Cope credits her husband, as well. He was a good man and she always asks herself how he would feel about a project. She gives to projects that are going to do the most good. One of those was the Ron and Carol Cope football stadium at the University of Nebraska at Kearney.

“The football stadium gift at UNK makes a difference to a large number of people – not just students and coaches but alumni, faculty and the people of Kearney,” she said.

She sees philanthropy as fulfilling. It gives her the feeling that she is helping somebody in a truly significant way.

“I’ve always felt that I owed something to the people who went before me. Philanthropy is a good way to realize that.”

Susie Buffett

You can’t start too early when it comes to early childhood education. Susie Buffett should know. It’s been her life’s work. And to help get children off to a better start Susie established the Buffett Early Childhood Institute at the University of Nebraska.

The institute is dedicated to promoting the development and success of children from birth to age 8. It focuses on helping those who are vulnerable because of abuse, poverty or developmental, learning or behavioral challenges.

“The fact is that lower income kids just don’t receive the same opportunity in their first five years that higher income kids do,” Buffett said. “And they go to school completely unprepared and the teachers get blamed because so many of these kids fail.”

Susie hopes the Buffett Early Childhood Institute can help change that.
Paul Engler

Paul Engler the entrepreneur got his start at an early age, buying cattle from the cattle barn on his own when he was 12 or 13. He wasn’t supposed to. He didn’t have his parents’ permission. His mother told him he was going to get a lickin’ when his father came home.

He didn’t.

Instead of using it to paddle his son’s behind, his father stuck out his hand to Paul and said, “I’m proud of you.”

Helping other young entrepreneurs was the goal when he started the Paul F. Engler Agribusiness Entrepreneurship Program at the University of Nebraska.

“We did it for the young people who have that fire in the belly, the ones out there who think there is a better way of doing things. Who want to be a little bit different than the other person.”

Robert Daugherty

Robert Daugherty knew a little something about the importance of water to agriculture and the world. As founder of Valmont Industries, one of the most successful irrigation companies in the world, he should.

That knowledge led him to make a $50 million gift to the University of Nebraska to support a global Water for Food Institute.

“The University of Nebraska is the right place, at the right time, with the right people to provide global leadership in this important area,” he said.

His gift has created a center for research, education and policy analysis related to the use of water for agriculture. It will allow the university to become a global resource for developing solutions to the challenge of hunger, poverty, agricultural productivity and water management. Mr. Daugherty passed away in 2010.

“Improving agricultural productivity has been my life’s work. I can’t think of a better investment to sustain that work than this institute.”
John & Carmen Gottschalk

As a teen, John Gottschalk didn’t understand much about philanthropy. Then he learned from his grandfather. John watched his grandfather help students attend Chadron State College. He knew in at least three cases grandpa had paid their full college tuition.

Now John and his wife Carmen give to causes that serve young people and prepare them for their and our nation’s future. They invest their money in institutions that most positively affect them.

“I was privileged to see my grandfather’s quiet gifting of an educated future – a gift that would last forever. He saw something he could make happen and he acted.”

And now John and his wife are doing the same.

Carl & Joyce Mammel

They both graduated from the University of Nebraska. Carl Mammel started a life insurance and employee benefit firm in Omaha in 1959. Joyce Mammel taught school. They were quite successful.

“We both benefited from the Omaha community and believe it is our responsibility to contribute back to the needs of the community, both with our time and financially,” Carl said.

They created a scholarship program for UNO students – Mammel Scholars. He meets with his scholars every year to see how they are doing. They also made the lead gift for the new UNO College of Business Administration building. It bears their name.

He lost her in 2009.

“Both Joyce and I graduated from the University of Nebraska. We owe a great deal to the University of Nebraska and have been pleased to support the university so it is in a better position to help others.”
Dan Morin

Dan Morin was the foundation’s director of investments and its longest tenured employee. Thirty years.

Dan passed away in June.

His investment knowledge, donor commitment and personal integrity were above reproach. Dan once questioned the foundation’s CEO about an expense. He didn’t lose his job. In fact, the CEO respected him for it.

He lived and worked in Lincoln, but Dan’s sweet home was Chicago. He never missed opening day at Wrigley and when the Blackhawks won the Stanley Cup? Well, that was just one of the best days ever.

Dan loved the foundation. He loved his family and his friends. He loved the Cubs. And while he no longer can be seen, everyone knows exactly where Dan is.

Out at the old ball game.

Dorothy & Dr. Leland Olson

When he was 17 his father died, leaving his mother and him to run the family hardware store in Palmyra, Neb. It was the mid-1930s and the height of the Depression.

He remembers the kindness of his teachers who allowed him to continue his studies and graduate from high school even though much of his time was spent at the hardware store.

“I also was fortunate to receive a Regents Scholarship to the University of Nebraska,” Dr. Lee Olson said. “It gave me a chance to begin studying medicine — an opportunity I otherwise could not have pursued.”

Those experiences greatly affected his philanthropic giving. She passed away last year, but while Dorothy was alive she and Lee believed strongly in helping entities that have influenced their lives and entities they know are of value to others. Like the University of Nebraska Medical Center. Their gift helped build the Olson Center for Women’s Health.

“We also believe that anyone who is successful owes that success to many others. In that regard it becomes our social responsibility to give back.”
You rarely see their names. Take a tour of UNMC and UNO, however, and their philanthropic handiwork is easy to see. And see. And see. Always named for someone else.

Few people have impacted change at the University of Nebraska as much as Ruth and Bill Scott. Here’s a partial list of their silent giving:

- The lead gifts for the Harold M. and Beverly Maurer Center for Public Health, the Center for Nursing Science at the College of Nursing, the Michael F. Sorrell Center for Health Science Education, all were made by Ruth and Bill. At UNO, they were the lead donors on the redevelopment of Roskens Hall which now houses the College of Education. And they were major contributors to Mammel Hall – the new College of Business Administration.

There is one exception however. UNMC’s student plaza bears their name. Their children asked them to allow it.

“A leading philanthropist once said, ‘It’s a sin to die rich,’” Bill Scott said. “It’s more fun to see the results while you’re alive.”

Walter Schmitt never went to college. He was too busy as a blacksmith, shaping red hot metal into what farmers needed around Gresham, Neb. He worked hard and invested his money himself, wisely in companies such as Exxon, Chevron and other oil producers.

His investments did well.

Walter didn’t like to pay taxes and discovered when writing his will that if he gave his money to charity he could avoid estate taxes. So, while he never attended it, he made the University of Nebraska his beneficiary and asked that the money be used for scholarships. It is one of the largest scholarship bequests ever given to the university.

But Walter gave more than money to the university. He gave himself.

In one final act of incredible generosity, he donated his body to science so the University of Nebraska Medical Center could use it to train future doctors.

All because of his love for learning.
Delbert Townsend was a child of the Great Depression. When he completed high school he didn’t have the opportunity to enroll in college. Since then, however, his generosity has enabled other students to attend the University of Nebraska.

A career soldier, Colonel Townsend served in World War II, Korea and Vietnam. His list of decorations includes the Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, two Bronze Stars and a Purple Heart, among others.

In 1998, he established the Colonel Delbert L. Townsend Scholarship program providing financial support for students from Red Willow County to attend college at UNL, UNK or UNO. It has evolved into NU’s most prestigious scholarship program for southwest Nebraska.

While Del passed away in 2010, his scholarship lives on.

“I am proud of my Red Willow County roots and have greatly appreciated the friendship and support I have received from its residents throughout my lifetime,” Townsend said. “I am happy to be able to assist the county in this manner.”

B.M. “Doc” Stevenson

He thought the world had been pretty good to him.

“Doc” Stevenson grew up in a small town in Minnesota where his dad was the town doctor. He followed his dad into medicine and became a surgeon in Kearney. He would leave before daylight and return almost after dark. He was happy.

He invested his money and one day it dawned on him that he had quite a bit.

Kearney had been pretty kind to him and his wife, too, so they gave back. They gave back to health and fitness organizations, they supported the arts and more in Kearney. They established the Dr. and Mrs. B.M. Stevenson Athletic Scholarship at UNK.

A tennis player himself, “Doc” helped the UNK tennis team.

“I think giving is a way of showing your gratitude for having been successful enough that you can give. Not everybody can. I just feel fortunate that I’ve been in that position.”
The Best Year Ever for Total Gifts

$172.1 million

Total Gifts to the Foundation in 2011

Donors gave $172,115,292 to the University of Nebraska Foundation in fiscal year 2011. This is the best year in the foundation’s 75-year history. This also represents the sixth consecutive year fundraising exceeded $100 million. The largest number of gifts came from individuals (48%), followed by other foundations (37.5%), corporations (13.1%) and other organizations (1.4%).

More than 99% of these gifts were directed by donors to a specific purpose or campus. Unrestricted gifts are provided to the university through an annual grants program to fund priority programs identified by the chancellor on each campus.
The Best Year Ever for Funds Transferred

$130.2 million

Funds Transferred to the University in 2011

In fiscal year 2011, the foundation transferred $130,158,987 to the University of Nebraska, an all-time record. The amount transferred is comprised of expendable gifts (the entire gift is provided to the university this year) and the net spendable income from endowed gifts. If the donor designated a specific intent, funds were transferred according to that intention.

Funds transferred to the university in fiscal 2011 include: student support ($23.6 million); faculty support ($5.1 million); academic programs ($30.4 million, which includes $552,000 for compensation and benefits for the university leadership team); research ($7.1 million); museums, libraries and fine arts ($5.1 million); campus and building additions, renovations or improvements ($57.9 million); and support for all four alumni associations ($1 million).
The Best Year-End Market Value for Total Assets

$1.7 billion

Foundation’s Total Assets in 2011

On June 30, 2011, the market value of the foundation’s total assets was $1,749,531,088, a 17.7% increase over last year. The largest component of the foundation’s assets is its endowment, valued at $1.2 billion, followed by cash holdings.

The foundation manages its main endowment, often referred to as Fund A, plus several smaller endowments. The main endowment includes about 4,500 individual funds created by donors and collectively invested. The return on the main endowment was 22.6% during the fiscal year. This 22.6% return ranks the foundation in the top 9% of the major institutional endowments across the country.*

The return on the endowment exemplifies the foundation’s philosophy of investing for the long term while managing risk and volatility. The foundation manages risk primarily through a strategy of diversification and continual monitoring of the funds that comprise the endowment.

All contributions are managed prudently and according to policies set by the foundation’s board of directors.
